We put up with garbage?

STATSCAN Ottawans are slightly more likely to put up with vandalism, graffiti and litter in the streets than their big-city counterparts.

In the first such study of its kind, Statistics Canada found that while Ottawa is on par with 11 other cities when it comes to complaining about "social incivility" such as noisy neighbours, loud parties and the like — (with 21 per cent complaining), they are less likely to moan about "physical incivility," such as vandals and litterbugs at 12 per cent. That's compared to an average of 16 per cent in other cities, said Leslie-Anne Keown, a social science researcher with Statistics Canada.

Published yesterday, the report assesses public perceptions of anti-social behaviour. Respondents in many of Canada's large cities were asked how much of a problem certain conditions or disruptive behaviours were.

While Ottawans reported slightly better conditions than residents of Winnipeg, Regina and Vancouver, "overall, Ottawa wasn't a lot different from the rest of the cities," said Keown. The study will be done again in 2009. TRACEY TONG/METRO OTTAWA

Khadr has 'suffered enough'

Youth's lawyers hope tape will ignite public outcry

Video of a teenaged Canadian-born terrorism suspect held in Guantanamo Bay, who repeatedly appears to be begging for help from his Canadian interrogators, should raise public calls to bring him home, his lawyers said yesterday.

Omar Khadr, a Canadian citizen, was arrested and shot twice at an al Qaeda compound in Afghanistan in 2002 by U.S. officials, who charge that the then 15-year-old threw a grenade that killed U.S. medic, Sgt.

Christopher Speer. Khadr has been held at Cuba's Guantanamo Bay for almost six years, and his legal team says Prime Minister Stephen Harper shouldn't ignore the cries of Canada's only citizen held at the prison any longer.

"Every other Western leader and many non-Western governments have recognized that Guantanamo Bay is an affront to the rule of law, and have demanded the return of their citizens to face justice at home," said lawyer Nathan Whitling, who helped win a Supreme Court ruling that compelled the government to disclose the video of Khadr's interrogation. The interrogation Canadian Security Intelligence Service officials occurred for four days in February 2003. Khadr's lawyers claim he was sleep deprived for days beforehand.

"The tapes do not show a dangerous terrorist, but instead, a frightened, wounded Canadian boy, pleading for help from Canadian offi-cials," Whitling said.

Khadr's supporters say he is a child soldier who should be rehabilitated. Harper has so far refused to intervene, saying Khadr faces serious charges.

In the first day of interrogation, the then 16-year-old boy appeared relieved to see Canadians, who offered him fast food and a soft drink, his lawyers said.

In the second day, Khadr's demeanor ap-peared to change dramatically. At one point, Khadr removed his shirt, and demanded they look at his scars. He claimed he was mistreated by U.S. prison officials. When interviewers left him alone, he sobbed violently into his hands.

"This kid has suffered enough. This kid needs to come home. This kid is not a terrorist," said lawyer Dennis Edney.

Hookah goes herbal at Lebanese Festival

Health concerns over cultural practice prompt change

TRACEY TONG tracey.tong@metronews.ca

Having a hookah need not get you hooked at this year's Lebanese Festival.

For the first time, the arguily tent at the festival that starts today is bringing in a nicotine-free "herbal tobacco" for use in the popular water pipe — which is traditionally used to smoke flavoured tobacco and is a popular feature of the annual cultural celebration.

tural celebration.

The change is in response to some health concerns about the Middle Eastern cultural practice in a province with a stringent anti-smoking policy, said arguily tent organizer Fadi Lteif

"It still simulates the smoking experience ... It smokes like regular nicotine, but it's more health conscious. It's like beer without alcohol.

Fadi Lteif, arquily tent organizer

The arguily (known alternately as shisha, or hookah) will provide the same social experience and flavour, but without the risk because the product doesn't contain nicotine, said Lteif.

"It still simulates the smoking experience. It still comes in the same flavours, but it's herbal. It doesn't come from a tobacco leaf.

"It smokes like regular nicotine, but it's more health conscious. It's like beer without alcohol."

One of the festival's most popular attractions, arguily dates back to around WWI. Water is placed inside the vase of the pipe. The ceramic bowl, fitted atop the pipe, is filled with herbal tobacco and covered with tinfoil. A piece of burning charcoal is placed on top and the smoker then puffs from a hose attached to the pipe.

While the tobacco-free way is a departure from Lebanese tradition, a lot more producers are "coming out with products that are tobacco-free but still taste the same," said festival co-ordinator Yolanda Saghbini.

A regular arguily, which is still smoked by traditionalists, does have adverse health effects, Lteif said.

"It's still nicotine," he said. "No matter how careful you are, you're still inhaling."

Another bonus — because the product is tobacco free, the festival didn't need a licence from Ottawa bylaw this year.

"The activity that festival is participating in does not involve the use of tobacco product, so there were no (restrictions)," said Susan Jones, Ottawa's director of bylaw and regulatory services

The festival, which starts at St. Elias Cathedral today, runs through Sunday.

Stephanie Valentine, 20, enjoys shisha yesterday afternoon on Sparks Street. The traditional Middle East water pipe will take a new turn in Ottawa today as the Lebanese Festival opens with "herbal tobacco."

'Persons of interest' sought by police

Heat seekers are to me, a different breed. When I'm hot, I get, well, bothered. I'm impatient, angry and unable to concentrate. So it made me curious when I learned about the hot yoga phenomenon and the people who do it.

regular yoga without trying it in a "hot room" set at 40 degrees Celsius.

The instructor, Martina Elliott, leads us through a series of 26 poses that make up Bikram yoga. In one of the poses, you're supposed to bend your legs and grab your ankles. But my slippery hand keeps sliding off.

On our backs, we lace our fingers together and pull our knees toward our chests. I'm so slimy from sweat, it's like trying to grab a baby seal.

I'm not alone. The woman in front of me has beads of sweat oozing out from each one of the pores on her legs.

We bend forwards to the ground. "One day, the goal is to touch your forehead to your toes," said Elliott.

Of course, I can't do it. But thanks to the heat, I'm a lot closer than I would be if it were cold.

'We use the heat for a few reasons," said Elliott, noting that the body stretches more easily when heated, making people less injury prone.

Some find the heat helps them burn fat and there's also a cardiovascular effect, she said.

It's so hot, my heart is pounding like a jackhammer, probably to keep me from losing consciousness.

Yoga of all types is growing in the city, said Laurie Howe, another instructor. In the past five years, it's become almost trendy, she

But Elliott likes to think it's because people are more aware of what yoga can do for practitioners. You sleep better, have more energy, fewer aches and pains, more patience, better mental clarity and fewer health problems overall, she says.

With five minutes left in the class, I can't wait for it to end. I've swallowed an enormous Nalgene bottle full of tepid water (the room's so hot, it'd melt an iceberg), but I'm still parched.

I'm drenched, and ditto for the towel I'm sitting on. My clothes are plastered to my body. I look like I fell into the Ottawa River and probably smell like it too. I long for an icy shower.

As if reading my mind, Elliott encourages us. "At this point in the class, your mind is starting to wander," she said. "It's the heat. It's hard to stay in the heat for 90 minutes. Keep focused and stay strong."

Elliott offers one last benefit that seriously makes me consider coming back.

Over time, your tolerance for heat rises, she said. "It just doesn't seem as bad outside in the summer."

The Conservative Party of Canada could be forced to assume $1.1 million in election expenses that it tried to shift to its local candidates in the 2006 vote, a move that would put the party over its election spending limit, a Commons committee has heard.

the Conservative party itself could be on the hook for those costs, pushing the party over the $18.2 million spending cap.

Mayrand, appearing before the committee yesterday, undercut the Tory defence that all parties engaged in this kind of financing shuffle during elections. In fact, Mayrand says a review of all campaign expense reports from the 2004 and 2006 elections revealed that the Conservatives alone transferred cash to local candidates and then back to the central office, coupled with other "red flags," including candidates' lack of knowledge about the ad campaigns they paid for.

Lumsden making history

Ticats star dominating at running back like no other Canadian before

Some time in the second quarter of the Tiger-Cats' loss to the Saskatchewan Roughriders the other day, as I sat in the upper deck of Ivor Wynne Stadium on one of those barbaric backless benches (ouch!), it occurred to me that there has never in CFL history been a Canadian running back quite as dominant as Hamilton's Jesse Lumsden is these days.

And I mean never ever. "He's an animal," observed linebacker JoJuan Armour of the Calgary Stampeders. "He's one of the best backs I've ever seen. He has the body of a guy that will run through you, but he can still make you miss and run past you. (With) a combination of talent like that, any back will be dangerous."

Playing a position that has been almost exclusively reserved for U.S. dudes, Lumsden has become so dangerous that, after the first three weeks of the regular season, he leads the CFL in rushing with 362 yards on 48 carries. That's an eyebrowraising average of 7.5 yards a carry — in a passhappy league.

The Ticats have more than doubled their scoring total from the corresponding period last year — they've produced 70

My game is in top shape, says Open favourite Garcia

Sergio Garcia, the title favourite in the absence of injured world No. 1 Tiger Woods, said yesterday he had never felt better prepared for a British Open.

"I feel like my game is probably as good as it's ever been," the world No. 7 told reporters. "I obviously feel good with my game and feel good with myself.

"I feel like I'm getting better as a player every tournament. I'm learning more things about myself."

Garcia, beaten by Ireland's Padraig Harrington in a playoff at the 2007 British Open, has never won any of the top four prizes in golf but he said his Players Championship victory in Florida in May felt comparable to a major

"The strength of the field, the difficulty of the course, the conditions, it really felt like a ma Garcia jor," said the 28-vear-old Spaniard.

"The winning score was like a major and for us (players) it feels like the fifth major. We all know it's not but it's one of the biggest tournaments we play all year."

Garcia said it would make no difference in tomorrow's opening round at Royal Birkdale that the bookmakers listed him as the favourite.

"It doesn't matter what anybody else says," he said. "At the end of the day, I know I've got to be favourite myself, in me.

"I have to go out there and do what I know how to do, believe in my ability to do it and then give myself a chance at winning.

"It's nice to be favourite but it doesn't mean it's going to help me, like my chances are going to be better because of that. I still have to go out there and perform."

Defender quits to train for priesthood

SOCCER A defender in Major League Soccer has quit his team to train for the priesthood in the Catholic Church.

Chase Hilgenbrinck, a 26-year-old with the New England Revolution, said he was retiring from the game to attend a Catholic seminary in Maryland.

"After years of discernment, I feel strongly that the Lord has called me to become a priest in the Catholic Church," Hilgenbrinck told the club's website revolutionsoccer.net.

"Though I will miss the game of soccer, I know that I am moving on to something much greater."

After college soccer in the U.S., Illinois native Hilgenbrinck spent four years in pro soccer in Chile before signing for the Revolution in March after a brief spell with the Colorado Rapids.

On the Wright track

Brothers follow family's Olympic legacy

TIM WIECLAWSKI tim.wieclawski@metronews.ca

For Anthony and Philip Wright, the Olympics are a family tradition stretching all the way back to 1932.

This summer, the field hockey-playing brothers will be following in the footsteps of their mother, father and grandfather when they represent Canada on sport's biggest stage. "We're all excited, but not so much nervous, not yet," Anthony, 23, said. "It's going to be a pretty unique and special opportunity. We have everything to gain and nothing to lose

This is the first Olympics for both brothers. Anthony's coaches say he is a prototypical defencemen, with exceptional endurance and great on-field vision.

"He can run for days and he tackles hard," said Shiaz Virjee, who coaches at the University of British Columbia. "He's one of the guys that you don't want to match up against.'

Philip, 21, is arguably the fastest player in the program. He was recovering from an injury leading up to the team selection and is a reserve. He will be travelling to Beijing, but will only play if another player is injured.

"He's coming along and becoming more of a player on his own and will probably represent Canada for years," said team manager

Ajay Dube. "Now is just possibly not his time.

In the buildup to the Games, their mother, Thelma, has been offering them both inspirational advice urging them to drink in the experience and make the most of the occasion, even though being thirdgeneration Olympians has meant they are singled out.

'The pressure is hard for them because they just want to be team players,' she said. Thelma knows the pressure of competing at the highest level. She ran for Canada in the 1,500 metres at the 1972 Munich Olympics and at the 1976 Games in Montreal.

The boys' father, Lee, also competed at the Montreal Olympics. It was his second Games as a member of the Canadian field hockey team. His previous time was in 1964 in Tokyo.

"We were competing in Montreal, when my father was the president of the Canadian Olympic Association, so that made it a special event for us. It was a family event," said Lee. His father, Harold Wright, was a sprinter for Canada in the 1932 Olympics.

CANADA'S WONDERLAND

But while their pedigree is impeccable, no member of the Wright family has come home with a medal.

Though the men's field hockey team's best highest placing ever was 10th at the 2000 Olympics, Anthony remains optimistic.

"Tournaments are a funny thing, and if you get on a roll, anything is possible," he said. "We're not favoured to win any medals, but I wouldn't put it out of the question.

I dream of Batmobile

Metro's Rick McGinnis gets his supervroom on with Dark Knight's ride

The first time designer lan MacIntosh saw the Batmobile on TV in 1966, he remembers almost losing control.

"The show was great, but the car was just the piece de resistance. It was the wickedest car ever," MacIntosh savs at the door of his Mississauga, Ont., car customizing space where he is building his own version of every man's dream car.

The show was Batman, the high-camp pop-art comedy show that starred Adam West and ran for two years in the late '60s and forever in syndication. MacIntosh's version of the Batmobile, sitting in front of us on the floor of his shop, is the product of over two years of labour and still a few months from completion.

If you're only used to the cherished Corgi die-cast model you owned as a kid, the first thing that strikes you is how massive it is - a long, low, lethal black sled of a car. MacIntosh's Batmobile is built on a 2002 Corvette C5 chassis that's been lengthened by two feet, and is al-

The car's body is rough, and MacIntosh is going to have it laser-scanned and tweaked on the computer before being re-fabricated and sealed in Kevlar - an option custom car godfather George Barris didn't have in 1966 when he built the first Batmobile. The famous flaming exhaust will be replaced with a slightly safer option. "We're going to put LEDs and speakers and CO2, and that way it'll blow a replica hind the car without getting torched. And that'll be connected to the gas pedal, so when you press the gas the sounds of the turbine increase and the lights increase the more CO2 comes out."

There are other Batmo-biles, of course. Just after talking to Ian I head down to Toronto's Eaton Centre to check out the Tumbler the Batmobile featured in Christopher Nolan's movie reboots of the caped crusader - and the Batpod, the monster motorcycle hidden in the Tumbler's bowels.

The Tumbler is a hulking thing, more military than drag strip, and it takes its inspiration from tanks and fighter jets, not the sleek fan-tasies of chrome and glass and aerodynamic steel that every male, even if he's never had a license to drive, responds to with a low groan. and for which the 1966 Batmobile is a wild, wicked, supreme expression.

MacIntosh's ambition is to get his car finished in time to enter it into the Targa Newfoundland, a 2,200 km car race where car nuts can show off their rides.

'My wife thinks I'm out of my head wanting a full-sized Batmobile," MacIntosh tells "How do you rationalize it? I don't know. I'm guaranteed that she doesn't like the car, but I will get her wearing a cat suit in that passenger seat if it's the last thing I ever

Bat and beyond

There have been countless Batmobiles in decades of DC comics, but here are a few key versions of the car, and some of their equally wicked competitors.

• 1941: The Batmobile is introduced in Detective Comics #27, but wasn't given its name until issue #48, though it was merely a red convertible with design elements of a Ford and a Lincoln.

1966: Batman and The Green Hornet debut on television the same year. introducing two awe-

1989: Tim Burton revives the Batman franchise, and introduces a new Batmobile - two Chevy Impala chassis and a V8 engine over which production designer Anton Furst conceives a long, low machine with a jet engine in the middle of the hood. 2005: Christopher Nolan rewinds Batman to the start with Batman Begins, and introduces The Tumbler, a massive, brutal machine with a military inspiration and details from the F-117 Stealth fighter that is never referred to once as a Batmobile.

Mamma Mia! latest film with wedding theme

STEVE GOW for Metro Canada

Damme (sorry, dudes!). Instead, with Friday's release of Mamma Mia!, the institution of marriage has reaffirmed its popularity once again in cinema. Could it be possible? Has Hollywood gone soft even as most of Tinseltown's divorce lawyers are busy drawing up annulment papers? Well, apparently so.

Not only does the musical Mamma Mia! tell the story of a young girl (Amanda Seyfried) trying to reunite her single mother (Meryl Streep) with her biological father, but it's all centred around the daughter's romantic Greek wedding.

It's only one of many films rocking a matrimonial theme this summer: Sex And The City has earned over $140 million with a marriage-dominated plot; Ashton Kutcher and Cameron Diaz got hitched in What Happens In Vegas; even tough guy Indiana Jones walked down the aisle in his latest adventure. In an age where the number of marriages in real life are declining, why are we suddenly seeing a more romanticized notion of matrimony in the movies?

According to a recent article in USA Today, perhaps one of the reasons is because women are now enjoying movies in a revived kind of way. Romantic comedies may have rebounded not as a date movie, but as a way to bond with your female friends.

As the boffo box office of Sex And The City proved, women could sell out theatres all on their own; the film is a successful romcom that doesn't require a date. As film producer Galt Niederhoffer states in the article, "(this movie is) being bought by women and driven by them and is making money for the studios. It's a big message to the movie-making community."

The community seems to be paying attention too. Woody Allen's Vicky Cristina Barcelona, The AccidenRomantic comedies may have rebounded not as a date movie, but as a way to bond with your female friends.

tal Husband, Rachel Getting Married and Bride Wars are just a few of the matrimonial-themed movies coming soon to a theatre near you.

Which finally brings me to that good news, guys: Movies about marriage may be the newest trend but at least you aren't needed to sit through them for your girlfriend's sake anymore. Then again, aren't you going to kind of miss feeling needed by your girlfriend, guys?

Ledger's family attends Dark Knight premiere

MOVIES Heath Ledger's family attended Monday's The Dark Knight premiere in New York, where the late actor's father left the theater giving a thumbs-up sign, People.com reports.

Kim Ledger and his wife Ines — Heath's stepmother — bypassed the red carpet and ducked into the theater to watch his late son play The Joker in the latest Batman film.

Also attending the premiere were Heath's mother Sally Bell and her husband, and Heath's older sister. Kate.

Cyrus wants cleaner Sex And City

SQUEAKY CLEAN: In an interview with TV Guide, last week's teen queen Miley Cyrus said that one of her ambitions is to make a 'younger, cleaner version of Sex And The City." I have this horrible feeling that Cyrus is a bit unclear about just what made the HBO series a hit, and that it wouldn't be replicated by replacing frank talks over Cosmos about the female perspective on male performance anxiety with a gang of perky gal pals sit-ting around a Starbucks complaining over their soy chai lattés about boys who've gotten addicted to the lap dance scenes in the new Grand Theft Auto. Or maybe it would?

PUNCH LINE: In the wake of the curious fracas about a recent New Yorker cover picturing Barack Obama and his wife in the White House dressed up as Osama Bin Laden and Angela Davis, the New York Times printed an apparently serious analysis piece on how TV comedians are having a hard time coming up with campaign trail gags about the Democratic presidential candidate.

"Why?" the Times earnestly asked. "The reason cited by most of those involved in the shows is that a fundamental factor is so far missing in Mr. Obama:

There no comedic 'take' on him, nothing easy to turn to for an easy laugh.

Really? So after a campaign full of gaffes like his recent call for Americans to teach their kids a second language - delivered in what can only be called a sophomore's very poor impersonation of Richard Pryor crossed with Steven Wright, after which it transpired that Obama, who was raised in Hawaii and Indonesia before attending colleges with world-renowned languages pro-grams, speaks only English himself there's absolutely nothing a comic can mine from the presidential hopeful?

Come on, people — they once made a laughingstock of Edmund Muskie and Walter Mondale for less.

While most of the latenight shows have been sympathetic to Obama, their rare attempts at poking fun at him have been. admittedly, met with audience resistance, as Jon Stewart recalled after a relatively mild gag about his campaign finance platform floundered in near-silence.

Paraphrasing the old adage that truth is the first casualty of war, it seems comedy is among the foremost in the partisan ideological battle that's typified the new millennium so far, and it is, as far as I'm concerned, a dismal state of affairs that both sides should be able to deplore equally.

Hancock still hot overseas

BOX OFFICE Hancock led the foreign box office for a second weekend, earning a huge $70.4 million US from 67 markets, according to final data issued Monday. Will Smith's superhero comedy opened at No. 1 in 12 markets, including Russia ($11.4 million), France ($9.9 million), and Mexico ($4.6 million). After two weekends, the U.K. has contributed $33.4 million, Germany $24.2 million and Korea $14.7 million. Its foreign total rose to $180.6 million.

Meanwhile, Kung Fu Panda reached an international total of $218.4 million as it pulled in $42.2 million from 44 territories. New markets for Panda included France ($7.4 million), and Spain ($6.3 million).

Rookie release Mamma Mia! had audiences singing along to the tune of $24.3 million from 12 territories. The ABBAinspired musical opens in North America on Friday.

The U.K., where the stage musical Mamma Mia! originated nine years ago, welcomed the film version at No. 1 with $13.1 million. Other No. 1 bows included Australia ($5.2 million) and ABBA's Swedish homeland ($1.7 million).

Dirty Jobs
"Ooh! See the pretty monkey!"
Or not. This episode chronicles one of the more dangerous jobs host Mike Rowe has experienced — and it took its toll on the crew as well. They travel to South Africa to a rehabilitation center and shelter for monkeys. Unfortunately for Mike and his band of merry cameramen, there's one monkey that takes a shine to their ankles — and anyplace else it can tear a chunk from. 8 PM on 42 DIS

Radio shock jocks and children of divorce are the targets in the hilarious "Mother Tucker." Peter is devastated when his mom (voice of Phyllis Diller) announces she's leaving his dad for anchorman Tom Tucker. But it isn't long before he embraces Tom as his new dad — reverting to childhood in the process. Brian gets his own radio gig, an intellectual endeavor ... until Stewie jumps aboard and turns it into a show that would make Howard Stern blush. 5:30 PM on 54 TROP

Rocker Love lashes out at Corgan

DISPUTE Courtney Love has publicly slammed Smashing Pumpkins front man Billy Corgan over his alleged refusal to attend her daughter's forthcoming birthday party. femalefirst.co.uk reports.

Love reportedly unleashed a tirade at the musician on a social forum website, accusing him of making her daughter Frances Bean cry after choosing not to attend her "Sweet 16" celebrations next Corgan reportedly grew close to the teen when he moved into Love's Los Angeles home in 2006 in a bid to help relaunch her music career.

But Love is adamant the rocker won't have any more communication with Frances — the daughter of late Nirvana icon Kurt Cobain — and has branded Corgan's behaviour "unacceptable

"A sweet 16 is a big event and I think she looked upon you as family," Love writes in the blog. "I know she did, as a trustworthy and wise (child), and you can't lay your s-t on a child of nine, and you as a man of 40 - my child sobbing, due to you, is unacceptable. I hate stating this on some random public forum, but the line is the kid, man.

Love also claims My Chemical Romance will be playing at the party, with front man Gerard Way even urging a bandmate to cancel his hon-

Milano swears off baseball players

RELATIONSHIPS Alyssa Milano has sworn off dating baseball players, because they are too childish, imdb.com reports.

The actress admits she is a huge fan of the sport, and even dreams of being a star slugger.

But, after dating Los Angeles Dodgers pitcher Brad Penny and Atlanta Braves star Tom Glavine, she's determined to court more mature men, like her current mystery beau, known only as "David."

Milano says, "They are grown men playing a little boy's sport. That makes them childish.'

The actress, who has designed a range of Major League Baseball-approved portswear and has her own baseball blog, admits she's such a huge fan of the sport, she dreams up game scenarios when she's trying to get to sleep. She adds, "My stress reliever is usually baseball. In fact, sometimes when I can't sleep -- because my mind is racing — I close my eyes and think about being at the stadium. I create game-winning situations.

Hilton slams media for Richie rumours

PRESS Paris Hilton has criticized the media for printing "lies' about her relationship with Nicole Richie — insisting recent reports about a feud between the pair are "completely false," imdb.com reports. Hilton was rumoured to have fallen out with her socialite pal after moving house to be closer to her boyfriend Benji Madden.

But the hotel heiress insists that although she has left her previous home, she is still living in the same Beverly Hills neighbourhood.

Hilton also denies that Richie — who is dating Madden's twin brother Joel — has opposed the move.

And the star singles out U.S. newspa-per the New York Post's PageSix gossip column for particular criticism.

She writes on her Myspace internet page, "Once again, I am blown away by more lies that are going around, and wanted to clear them up with all of you. I'm sick of PageSix and other gossip sites printing completely false stories.

> "PageSix reported that I have moved into Benji's neighbourhood, and that Nicole is upset by this, So Not True!"
